Inspiration

What if you can't tell Does it matter——Westworld

I wanna be real for you——Blade Runner2049

In "Westworld", I was deeply impressed impressed by the programmable bodies. Artificial life continuously cycles within the program, with the body being reset, repaired, and reshaped, presenting a kind of almost consumable and renewable physicality.

We are alive.And now we are free.
Detroit Become Human

In "Blade Runner", the replicants in the film simultaneously exhibit "true emotions" and "fictional memories", highlighting the paradox of memory as the core of identity: If memories can be implanted, then where does the authenticity of the "self" lie?
