The A.T. virus reshaped the laws of survival on Earth.
The human military, shocked by cities in chaos, developed the code of human civilization within 72 hours, human-to-human contact is considered a crime, and the virus is spread by touch. Each human is a carrier of the virus, and their skills were restricted to mechanical transport. The virus distorted the human body and mind, and the human race was divided into two camps: those who were infected and those who were not, and the latter were forced to hide from the virus in secret.
Power restructuring is accompanied by bloody trials.
Experimental dogs slaughter those in white coats, abused cats kill their owners, and the virus is spread by touch. Each human is a carrier of the virus, and their skills were restricted to mechanical transport. The virus distorted the human body and mind, and the human race was divided into two camps: those who were infected and those who were not, and the latter were forced to hide from the virus in secret.
An absurd civilization continues in madness.
Shrouded-mind degenerated humans in wheelchairs continue to live in the ruins of the old world, relying on stimulants and entertainment to numb their minds and bodies. Cats, on the other hand, have become the only survivors to evolve humanity's pre-collection experience and have established a new civilization, and cross-species warfare is inevitable.
